ADVANCEMENT TO CANDIDACY/DISSERTATION RESEARCH

The qualifying examination will consist of two written examinations, for which there will be written feedback, and the dissertation prospectus, followed by an oral defense of the prospectus. The qualifying exam covers three areas:

- 1) feminist approaches to knowledge (feminist theory, method and epistemologies)
- 2) Specialized Field Exam (either race and nation, genders and sexualities, productive and reproductive labors, or an approved interdisciplinary configuration)
- 3) a dissertation prospectus

Reading lists, approximately 100 items total, will be drawn up with the advisor and exam committee. The examination committee will be composed of at least three UC Academic Senate faculty members: the advisor, one other from the core faculty, and one from either the core or affiliated faculty. The written exams are "take-home" and will be taken in the same quarter, two weeks apart, and consist of two essays each, for approximately 20-30 pages per exam. Students will have up to two weeks for each exam. The prospectus will be due no later than the following quarter and must be submitted to the committee two weeks before an oral defense of approximately two hours. Successful completion will advance a student to doctoral candidacy.
